I have a script warning at IE 11 and it works well on the another version browser. Error: Unable to get property '...' of undefined or null reference. I tried to resolve the issue but it did not fix the error. For example the activeX component works on the other version browser and it does not on IE 11. Please suggest me how to resolve this. A: you could try adding to the end of your script, var hwnd = window.self.Top.hwnd; if (hwnd != null) { window.self.Top.hwnd = hwnd; } Q: I am completely new to MVC and was wondering if I can model my database using MVC principles I am new to MVC. Can someone help me in this regard? I am working in an organization. So I need to create an application using MVC principles. All the data is stored in a database table. A user at the application will enter all the data into the database. So, can I model the table using MVC and the different actions should be routed to different controllers. Is there a better way? Not sure what database you're using but for a legacy system, maybe something that is not MVC friendly, it would be best to run your web app using a custom framework that comes with model-view-controller code. I'm not sure where you're getting the idea that MVC will handle the database, as this is usually just a separate task that the programmer is responsible for. However, you can rest assured that MVC will help structure your application design and keep things in their proper place. Set output directory for debugging in Eclipse PDT I've just started to use PDT for PHP, but I noticed that when I use an "advanced view" to view the code of a file, instead of outputting it in the directory I want, it outputs it in the root. Is there any way to change that? Yes, from File > Open... in the main menu, or by pressing Ctrl+1 on the keyboard, then select PHP Files >...
